Reflections on a Lifetime

How do I know or remember all of these details? Simply because I heard them repeated so many times during my young life, and of course, I was present until the other was given to me. Also during that period some sixty years ago, orthopedic surgery was not what it has become today. The general procedure simply was to wait for this sort of an emergency, and I would like to believe that the doctor did the very best job under difficult circumstances. Thirty years later when I first came to the University of Iowa, I was told by a hand specialist in the University Hospital that surgery now could have corrected the reading problem. Think what they are doing today by re-attaching what!

In any event, the tendons in my young hand had contracted up the arm with the result that the surgeon had to make an incision about one and one-half inches long up the little finger side of the hand to track the tendons and break them where they were like small rubber bands. Apparently, he was able to reconnect the main artery but in the process he got the tendons mixed up and failed to re-attach one of the very important tendons to the thumb which has meant to this day I have been unable to pick up a coin, pin, or many other things with that hand. Recollection was slow and I remember so well returning to my fifth grade class that fall with my impressively bandaged hand lying on a pillow. Often the wound would bleed, discharging the bandage and me. Being right-handed, I had a very difficult time adjusting to school life as well as to my personal needs. That fall meant many trips to the doctor's office but finally the bandage was removed and the injury healed. I can remember so well the doctor saying to my father (father and mother) "Don't worry about him, he will be all right, we have a job to do here."

At this point my hand was doubled tightly in a cast and several times a week for what seemed like years, I went to a therapist after school who massaged my hand with his olive oil to strengthen the tendons as well as stretch them in hopes of making the hand seem more normal. In time it looked better but in recent years I have lost much of my flexibility, and of course I have never been able to move the fingers independently.

But I survived and soon I began to live a somewhat normal life again. How I ever finished the fifth grade I cannot tell you but come the next year, I was promoted to sixth grade right on schedule.

It didn't take long, though, to get back on the track and I suspect I was partly to blame for my early return. You see, it was our way of life, and I can get some nostalgic remembering those days when my brother and I would ride on the trolley behind the track and make deliveries to Dad. He would help when necessary.

Glenwood School
Do you remember way back when?

Students from all grades pose for their group picture in front of the Glenwood School, just outside of Dillsburg. Located at Glenwood and Cedar Hollow Roads, this new school house has no electricity or water. Give a few of the youngsters there an address in the community today. Can you name them all? The Dillsburg Banner challenges its readers to identify all of the students pictured above. Two winners will be selected.

Prizes to be awarded are subscriptions to the Dillsburg Banner. 31 S. Pioneer and your answers to: The Dillsburg Banner, 31 S. Pioneer, Dillsburg, PA 17019, or drop them off between Baltimore Street and Dillsburg, PA 17019, on Monday thru Friday. A drawing will be held on the 15th of November. Winner will win a $100.00 cash prize. Deadline is Wednesday, October 31 at 5:00 p.m.

Purple Haze

With Farmers' Fair now open in Dillsburg, the whole town is very busy preparing. Even NHS has gotten a little extra boost from this time of year.

The students at NHS get a day off from all of their academic responsibilities. The doctors give the day to sleep in and get ready for the coming weekend. The day off also helps the students relax before the busy days ahead.

People must prepare and set up things before the actual fair begins and spend a lot of money for the seemingly short weekend of activities.

Thursday and Friday are for the purpose of working, which is not always so easy. But the work put in on these two days is definitely worth the while on Friday night and all day Saturday.

A lot of people are needed to work at the various concession stands, and many of these people are students. They work for every imaginable group and organization. It keeps them out of trouble for the day.

When not working, the students seem to relax the stress. The feeling of being able to relax as well is unusual.

The atmosphere somewhat resembles

Marlin Gray in New Orleans, although we don't have masks or Mardi Gras. The parade each night are highlights in the scheduling that goes on before and after. It may seem like everything is in a social event, but in truth it is. The parade is fun and some things in the parade are not so much. The parade is the reason for the yearly event. The parade is the highlight of the fair, and everyone is there. The parade is the highlight of the fair, and everyone is there.

Farmers' Fair brings much more than parade and food; it also puts our teachers at NHS in good mood. They seem to know that the weekend is like, so they ease up on the books. There are those teachers who insist that the students have all day Friday to work on schoolwork, but the majority of the faculty at NHS is not involved with Farmers' Fair.

An issue during Farmers' Fair that many people don't think about is parking. The whole idea of parking and enough room for all of the vehicles is a problem and it can be a real crisis for young drivers. This may not be difficult for most adults, but for new drivers at NHS it is a horror. They fear the lack of parking at night, parking in dark alleys, and searching for the perfect spot. I know this experience because I am one of those new, inexperienced drivers. The fortunate few who live in town are within walking distance of everything. Good luck and be careful of student drivers this weekend.

At work every week in this column, the sports scene must be mentioned. The football game this Friday at home against Lehigh Valley. It will be a tough decision between the parade and the football game, but the hope we will see a lot of fans at Robert F. Bonta field that night. All good luck to the field hockey, soccer, cross-country, volleyball, and football teams this week.

Annual Fall musical

The Annual Fall Musical will be held at the Lower Berks Lutheran Church, Sunday, October 28 at 7 p.m. The church is located across from Lake Meade. East Berlin. Everyone is welcome.
